In the ever-changing world of dentistry, communication and collaboration are paramount to patient care success now more than ever. Patients are armed with more information (and misinformation) and are bombarded with direct-to-consumer treatments and advertisements. We owe it to them to provide comprehensive options that help them to navigate these hurdles and choose treatment options that provide long-term success.

We will review the differences between multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary care and show how collaboration between dental professionals can lead to improved outcomes. The workflow between offices can seem daunting but that can easily be overcome; and this will be demonstrated through cases involving multiple disciplines, treatment planning and coordination.

Patients benefit from methodical treatment planning and coordination of care.

Objectives:

- Learn the value of interdisciplinary treatment planning through case examples.
- Understand the difference between multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary treatment planning, with emphasis on communication between the practitioners.
- Realize the value each clinician brings to the table and maximize that potential
- See various work flows that can achieve the ultimate treatment result, and the ways the talent of each practitioner can complement one another.
